Introduction

Prior to the arrival of European colonists in the Southeastern United States, the Cherokee people lived throughout the southern portion of the Appalachian Mountains. Although they encountered European explorers when Hernando DeSoto passed through Tennessee in 1540, the Cherokee remained relatively isolated until the English settled Virginia in 1609. Although the Cherokee traded with European settlers and fought as their allies in several wars, they steadfastly resisted any encroachment on their land by either Europeans or other Native Americans. Despite their best efforts, however, their homeland was gradually reduced until President Andrew Jackson began refusing to enforce laws prohibiting encroachment on Cherokee land in 1828 and Congress passed the Indian Removal Act in 1830. In order to prevent a devastating war, Cherokee leader John Ross chose to fight for his people's rights in United States' court system. Although the Cherokee Nation won both cases they brought before the Supreme Court, Jackson refused to honor the rulings and began the Cherokees' removal to Oklahoma, commonly known as the Trail of Tears. Although the Cherokee managed to maintain a few small population centers in the Southeast, most were sent to Eastern Oklahoma. Here, they settled with another group of Cherokee who had been removed from Texas. The two groups fought bitterly until Congress proposed dividing the two factions into separate tribes, which proved to be enough incentive for the two groups to come to terms and form the Cherokee Nation in 1846. In 1887, the Cherokee lost approximately 2/3 of their remaining land with the passage of the General Allotment (Dawes) Act. Today, most Cherokee still live in Oklahoma, although there are a few Cherokee population centers remaining in the Southeast.

This bibliography provides an overview of the Special Collections Library's holdings relating to the Cherokee people. These items include materials documenting Cherokee life in the Southeast, the Cherokee Removal (Trail of Tears), and subsequent Cherokee settlement in Oklahoma. Listed materials have been organized by subject and placed in ascending chronological order within each category. Researchers may consult these materials in the Library's reading room on the second floor of the James D. Hoskins Library (1400 Cumberland Avenue) during our normal working hours of Monday to Friday, 9.00am to 5.30pm. Researchers should note that the Library also participates in the Southeastern Native American Documents project (available online), which provides access to six libraries' holdings regarding Native American groups in the Southeast. More information can be found in the UT Libraries' general catalog (<http://www.lib.utk.edu/catalog>) and on the Special Collections Library's website (<http://www.lib.utk.edu/spcoll>).
