Abstract: This collection houses eight letters from Robert A. Ragan to his wife, Emeline (Neass) Ragan. In them, Ragan discusses battles and skirmishes with the "Rebels," describes the landscapes he has seen, relates his frustration with army life, mentions his fear of moving too far South, and comments on his unit's movements and actions. He also expresses his concern for his family and friends in Tennessee and asks Emeline to write to him and to "pray for me in this struggle."
